Facebook v. Power Ventures

EFF has urged a San Francisco federal court and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals to dismiss Facebook's claims that criminal law is violated when its users opt for an add-on service that helps them aggregate their information from a variety of social networking sites.

Power Ventures was a company that allowed users to login and manage all of their social networking accounts from one place. In 2008 Facebook sued the company, alleging it had violated the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act (CFAA) and the California state CFAA equivalent when it allowed users to access Facebook data after it blocked a specific IP address Power was using to connect to Facebook data. Facebook also claims that Power violated the CAN-SPAM Act, the federal law that prohibits sending commercial emails with materially misleading information, when Power encouraged users to invite their friends to try Power through Facebook's Events feature because the header information indicated the messages came from Facebook, not Power.

The page features a yellow header bar with links for Orkut, Facebook, MySpace, HIS, and other social media platforms. A central banner promotes a contest to "Win 100 dollars!" by bringing 100 new friends. The main content area displays a "Profile" section for a user named Bruno Carvalho from Brazil, showing an animated photo and a status update. To the right, a "My friends" section lists several users, with one profile picture circled in red. A sidebar on the right contains promotional banners for "CONFIRA AS NOSSAS OFERTAS" and "fast shop.com".

Yahoo Sets the Date of GeoCities' Death

Yahoo has put a date on when the GeoCities service will close, after stating in April that it was no longer accepting new accounts.

By Geoff Fox July 10, 2009 11:17AM EST

The Google search result I got around a minute ago was headlined "Yahoo! GeoCities: Get a web site with easy-to-use site building tools." That's gonna change.

Yahoo has put a date on when the service will close, after stating in April that it was no longer accepting new accounts.

"GeoCities is closing on October 26, 2009," the site said. "On October 26, 2009, your GeoCities site will no longer appear on the Web, and you will no longer be able to access your GeoCities account and files."

If you'd like to move your web site, or save the images and other files you've

A screenshot of a web browser window displaying the Facebook Developers Access Tokens page. The title bar shows the URL as <https://developers.facebook.com>. The main content area features a sidebar with links like Facebook Login, Overview, iOS, Android, Web, Other Platforms, Authentication Versus Data Access, Business Login for Direct Businesses, Access Tokens (which is the current section), Refreshing User Tokens, Extending Page Tokens, Debugging & Errors, ASID Security Check Scripts, and Portability. The main content area has a large heading "Access Tokens". Below it, a paragraph explains that when someone connects with an app using Facebook Login and approves the request for permissions, the app obtains an access token that provides temporary, secure access to Facebook APIs. A callout box points to the "Access Token Tool". Another paragraph describes what an access token is and how it is used. A table at the bottom lists different types of access tokens.

Access Tokens

When someone connects with an app using Facebook Login and approves the request for permissions, the app obtains an access token that provides temporary, secure access to Facebook APIs.

You can see a list of your access tokens and debugging information for each token in the Access Token Tool.

An access token is an opaque string that identifies a user, app, or Page and can be used by the app to make graph API calls. Access tokens are obtained via a number of methods, each of which are covered later in this document. The token includes information about when the token will expire and which app generated the token. Because of privacy checks, the majority of API calls on Facebook need to include an access token. There are different types of access tokens to support different use cases:

Access Token Type	Description
User Access Token	The user token is the most commonly used type of token. This kind of access token is needed any time the app calls an
